About

Toys & tools

18 to 24 month old toddlers go through a period of rapid growth, when they are learning new word(s) every day,” Wood says. At this point your budding linguist may have a vocabulary of 50 to 100 words. “The 100 word milestone is important because this is when toddlers really start combining words to make simple phrases,” she explains. These sentences start as two- or three-word sentences (e.g., “my toy!”) and slowly but surely become more complex.“ Although there may be some slight variability, by 24 months you should be starting to lose track of the number of words they have and be focusing more on different combinations of words.

Check off ones you have already tried to get more suggestions

Talk constantly

Narrate your daily activities, from putting away groceries to playing with toys.

Read together

Look at pictures and name them, which helps toddlers associate words with objects.

Sing songs and say rhymes

This introduces different word sounds and patterns in a fun way.

Use gestures

Point to objects, body parts, and people as you say the corresponding words.

Expand on their words

If your toddler says "dog," respond with "Big dog!" or "Go, dog!".

About

Guide

Toys & tools

To encourage your toddler to speak in two- to three-word phrases, focus on creating language-rich environments by modelling phrases, reading books, singing songs, and narrating daily activities. Give your toddler choices, allow time for responses to questions, and expand on their single words with two-word expansions. Make language use functional and meaningful to your child, and celebrate their efforts to communicate.

Create a language-rich environment

Talk constantly:

Narrate your daily activities, from putting away groceries to playing with toys.

Read together:

Look at pictures and name them, which helps toddlers associate words with objects.

Sing songs and say rhymes:

This introduces different word sounds and patterns in a fun way.

Use gestures:

Point to objects, body parts, and people as you say the corresponding words.

Encourage word combinations by expanding on their words:

If your toddler says "dog," respond with "Big dog!" or "Go, dog!".

Model two-word phrases:

Say phrases like "Light on" when turning on a light, or "More juice" when they ask for juice.

Ask questions with choices:

Offer choices like "Do you want the red boots or the blue shoes?" instead of "Do you want to go outside?".

Involve your child in activities:

Let your child help with tasks like making a snack and talk about the actions and describing words.

Make it interactive and meaningful

Use high-impact phrases:

Focus on words that help your toddler get their needs met, such as "Stop!" or "Help!".

Give your toddler time to respond:

Pause after asking a question to give them a chance to formulate their own answer.

Respond to gestures:

Acknowledge and respond to their pointing or sounds, and put words to their gestures, like "Fast car!" when they point to a car.

Don't overcorrect:

Instead of criticising mispronounced words, repeat the word or phrase correctly in a natural way.

Seek professional help if your child's language delay seems persistent or is causing frustration.

Consider consulting a speech and language therapist.
